Public Administration and Disability: Community Services Administration in the US

Based on decades of evidence-based research and technical assistance, Public Administration and Disability: Community Services Administration in the US brings together the diverse, expert perspectives and discusses the leading efforts of the past three decades in the field of disability and community services. The book highlights the development of community service systems in the US, underlining the importance of deinstitutionalization, family and community support, user-directed and consumer-controlled community integration and inclusion, and universal and barrier-free design movements.

An introduction to the field of community services administration, the book covers:

- Theory and history
- Leadership
- Long-term support services in the US
- Family support services
- Housing and community
- Employment and "adult day programs"
- Comparative systems at the state level
- Services at the city level
- Issues in rural and independent living
- Public and individual budgeting/finance
- Contemporary workforce issues
- Intergovernmental relations
- Disability public policy and policy research
- International agendas
- Future

The book explores a framework that would finally bring together the community and community development worlds. It describes models and theories of disability, long-term services and supports in communities, comparative community service systems and exemplary services, contemporary administrative areas, the national policy research and international human rights agendas, and the future of public administration, disability, and community in the global context. It provides a beginning point to consider what the "disability" field "publicly knows" and what can be done to develop a full conceptualization and actualization of the future of services and communities in the twenty-first century.
