Film is often used to represent the natural landscape and, increasingly, to communicate environmentalist messages. Yet behind even today's "green" movies are ecologically unsustainable production, distribution, and consumption processes. Noting how seemingly immaterial moving images are supported by highly durable resource-dependent infrastructures, The Cinematic Footprint traces the history of how the "hydrocarbon imagination" has been central to the development of film as a medium.

Nadia Bozak's innovative fusion of film studies and environmental studies makes provocative connections between the disappearance of material resources and the emergence of digital media—with examples ranging from early cinema to Dziga Vertov's prescient eye, from Chris Marker's analog experiments to the digital work of Agnès Varda, James Benning, and Zacharias Kunuk. Combining an analysis of cinema technology with a sensitive consideration of film aesthetics, The Cinematic Footprint offers a new perspective on moving images and the natural resources that sustain them.

Karin Decker:

As a student exactly feel bored to help reading. If their teacher requested them to go to the library as well as to make summary for some reserve, they are complained. Just very little students that has reading's heart and soul or real their passion. They just do what the instructor want, like asked to go to the library. They go to generally there but nothing reading really. Any students feel that reading is not important, boring along with can't see colorful pictures on there. Yeah, it is for being complicated. Book is very important in your case. As we know that on this era, many ways to get whatever we really wish for. Likewise word says, many ways to reach Chinese's country. Therefore this The Cinematic Footprint: Lights, Camera, Natural Resources can make you sense more interested to read.
