The dawning realization of the rapid pagan drift of contemporary culture is coming as a rude shock for many still used to living in once "Christian-friendly" America. But the church must neither panic nor modify its message. Once again, the apostle Paul offers a prescription for the times just as he did in his day 2,000 years ago. Understanding the uniqueness of the gospel in light of paganism ancient or modern, Paul's "gospel" will provide the blueprint for faithful thinking and living in the third millennium.
